Crooked Mick is a larger-than-life character from Australian Oral Tradition, emerging during the era of the swagmen. A sort of aussie Paul Bunyan, he is almost ubiquitous with the equally fantastic Speewah; there are Speewah tales without Crooked Mick, but there are no Crooked Mick tales not set in the Speewah.

Many an Outback yarn featured The Speewah, and sometimes Crooked Mick, one of its most fabled workers, or Big Bill "who built the barbed-wire fence", or Slab-face Joe. These stories were often set in the period from a bit before the great shearers' strike of 1891 through to the 1920s. The location of The Speewah is hard to pin down.

So Crooked Mick decided to catch one of the cod. Well every line he tried just snapped, as soon as the bait was taken, and when he tried a chain, the hooks just got bitten through. When he used case-hardened hooks, the cod just pulled and bent them out straight.
