Under-occupied developments in China are mostly unoccupied property developments in China, and commonly referred to as "ghost cities" or "ghost towns". The phenomenon was observed and recorded as early as 2006 by writer Wade Shepard, and subsequently reported by news media over the decades, often cast in a negative light. News stories around the topic have been criticized as hasty judgments.

Ghost city: Kangbashi was meant to be the urban centre for wealthy coal-mining community Ordos and home to its one million workers, but its roads are eerily empty and the houses stand vacant The...

Ghost Cities of China is a fascinating, highly readable, and well-researched study of the role that urbanization and real-estate development have played in the Chinese economic growth "miracle" of the last 30 years, based on many years of research in China.

"Ghost Cities" have become a phenomenon of global interest since 2009 when popular media highlighted the existence of Ordos, a large Chinese city that was almost entirely vacant. The term is used to describe housing vacancy associated with overdevelopment and can refer to small communities, neighborhoods, or even whole cities that lie vacant.

Ghost Cities of China author Wade Shepard — who has been documenting the existence of ghost cities since he first stumbled across a sprawling vacant metropolis in 2006 — sees these cities as simply in a phase between construction and inhabitability.

The ghost cities in China have it all - high rise apartments, lakes, roads, shopping centres. The only thing missing is the inhabitants. Today, China has more than 50 underpopulated ghost cities....

Fengdu Ghost City (simplified Chinese: 丰都; traditional Chinese: 豐都 (traditional form of the revised name); pinyin: Fēngdū Guǐ Chéng, originally 豐都) is a large complex of shrines, temples and monasteries dedicated to the afterlife located on the Ming mountain, in Fengdu County, Chongqing municipality, China.

Kangbashi, for example, has around 100,000 inhabitants today.

Although it was originally designed to hold 500,000 and does feel rather empty at times, you can hardly call a city with 100,000 people living in it a ghost city! The population of the so-called ghost cities is starting to increase. Established in 1993 and located east of the Huangpu River, Pudong is probably the most successful example of a former ghost city.

Out of all these phantoms however, nothing compares to the strangeness of China's 'Ghost City': Ordos. The city of Ordos is a heavily stylised population centre located close to the Ordos Desert,...
