I recently bought a husqv 359 from some poor soul trying to distance himself from his chainsaw problem. That's what he implied, anyway. He had replaced the scored cylinder with a "good used" one and installed a new meteor piston. Just to get it going, I guess, he put on a carb from a 350. It started easily and idled well, but would not rev out.

Husqvarna 359 W/20" Bar. Read consumer reviews on many saws before deciding on the 359, purchased it used from ebay. I heat my home with wood and have used a small "Husky" (141) for years.

I have a 359 that Bob

(spike60 from the AS) did some work on for me. Took off the cat muffler put on a screened air cleaner and removed the limiter caps. That saw has gone through many piles of firewood and is still pulling hard. He claims it's not one of husqvarna's better saws but I'm liking it.

Overall, the Husqvarna 359 brings the Husqvarna series a step closer to what a professional woodcutter needs in term of chainsaws. Its robust design and low vibration makes it ideal for use up to eight hours a day. It's a reliable and effective tool and has many adjustable features that will allow you to customize it to your needs.
