Believing, as Dr. Thomas Barnett does in The Pentagon's New Map, that "America needs to stand for so much more than simply abiding by the status quo around the world," I was searching for an understanding as to why the United States seemed hesitant to transform its military strategies, even when the existing paradigm's weakening viability was becoming increasingly apparent.

Review of Thomas P.M. Barnett's 'The Pentagon's New Map'

A sometimes strange, sometimes Strangelovean white paper destined to top policy-wonk reading lists in the months to come—especially if, as the author suggests, the Pentagon is taking it seriously. "I am proposing a new grand strategy on a par with the Cold War strategy of containment—in effect, its historical successor," writes Barnett (Naval War College).
